

What name does your number send when you call?

When you call a customer, their carrier looks up a name for your number in the national caller-name (CNAM) database. Many business lines return no name, a staff member's name or a leftover setup value. We check yours, file the corrections, and look it up again 30 days later.

What the US$149 covers

- ✓ A "before" lookup of every number: name, line type, carrier
- ✓ Free Caller Registry filing, which reaches Hiya, First Orion and TNS, who label calls for AT&T, T-Mobile and Verizon
- ✓ Direct filings if a "Spam Likely" or "Scam" label shows
- ✓ Your provider's change request, with the steps for their system
- ✓ The 30-day recheck report, and a free second one if needed

What we can't do

- ✗ Change the name ourselves: only your provider can
- ✗ Promise what a phone shows; some carriers use their own data
- ✗ Guarantee a label. We sell filings and checks, not outcomes
- ✗ Check Canadian numbers (US lookups only)

HOW How a Caller ID Check runs

Important: VIC2RY Consulting is independent and not endorsed by the Free Caller Registry, Hiya, First Orion, TNS, AT&T, T-Mobile, Verizon or any provider named here. Lookups use Twilio's Lookup service, which reads the national CNAM database. Some carriers show names from their own data, so a lookup is a strong guide, not proof. The registries, carriers and your provider alone decide what name or label appears, and when. Chicago figures: our test of 200 dental office numbers, October 28, 2026.
